The following excerpt is taken from a 2010 article from Panasonic, a reputable entertainment company.

Panasonic Corporation of North America, (NYSE: PC), a major developer of the DVD format, today announced two new DVD players, the DVD-S38 and the DVD-S58, both with multi-format playback, making them ideal for users who record their own discs on standalone DVD recorders in addition to watching commercially pre-recorded DVD discs. At the same time, Panasonic announced that its successful 2009 line of DVD recorders and portable DVD player would continue in 2010. The later features a 13 hour battery, making it an ideal travel companion.

Both new DVD players are advanced progressive scan DVD/CD players. The S58 features, Dolby® Digital and dts(TM) Digital Out for high quality audio. For premium picture quality, the S58 provides 1080P HD up-conversion...

These two new players join a family of trusted Panasonic DVD products including the DVD-LS86 Portable DVD Player, and two DVD recorders, the dual VHS/DVD-DMR-EZ48V and the DMR-EZ28 that will continue in the line in 2010. Both DVD recorders include a digital tuner that can be employed as a source for digital television transmissions.

"I keep cable because there are certain programs, mainly sports programs, that I am not confident that I can watch consistently otherwise. Pretty much, I'm not sure that I'll be able to get NFL Football, every Knicks game, and every Yankees game on a streaming service. If I have cable, I know that I'll be able to watch the Knicks games, the Yankees games, and football every Sunday."
